Letter to the Managers, Coaches, Players and Families

As we all gather to celebrate the achievements of our players, volunteers, and community, I would like to focus on the virtues of Little League and its mission to use the power of youth Baseball and Softball to teach life lessons that build stronger individuals and communities.

We prioritize inclusion as the intentional part of our culture, which is created when we provide equitable opportunities, access, and respect for individual differences and perspectives. Little League is committed to ensuring every player, coach, parent, and volunteer feels welcome and included, whether at their local league or at the World Series. No matter what corner of the world you're from, you have a part in writing the next chapter of the Little League story, so make it one to remember.

We believe that teamwork is the shared efforts of individuals, characterized by trust, commitment, and communication, in pursuit of common goals. As a community-based organization, every Little League program may look or feel unique in its own way, but no matter what field you play on, all of us are unified by one common identity. Together, we are all One Team. One Little League., and it's our responsibility to stress teamwork and the importance of dreaming big and doing our best, together.

We act with respect, honesty, and integrity in all that we do. Whether you are a player, parent, or volunteer, we all play an integral role in making the Little League experience memorable, especially when moments are tough. We are all role models, no matter our age or experience, so it's our time to step up to the plate and be the version of you that you would look up to.

We are committed to the development and growth of community within Little League.® Born in Williamsport, Pennsylvania, in 1939, and alive today in communities all around the world, the Little League program has grown into the world's largest youth sports organization with a story spanning across generations of families. But our story is far from over, and it's up to each of us to not only add our own chapters but to share the amazing stories of those who came before us.

We cultivate fun by creating an environment characterized by enjoyable, memorable, and safe experiences, which result in a sense of belonging and individual growth. The story of Little League® began nearly a century ago. And it's up to us to write the latest installment in an epic series, every time we play. We all share the story of Little League, and when we add to it, when we make it our own, we make it even better. Because we know this: the greatest stories aren't open and shut. The greatest tales ever told aren't contained between two covers—they happen on this field. So, write your chapter. Whether it's your first, or your greatest. Create your story.
